Trip description

The Audubon Center for Birds of Prey is an urban educational nature center that sits on 3 acres of land spanning two diverse communities, Eatonville and Maitland. Celebrating more than 37 years, the Center remains Florida's premier raptor rehabilitation facility, treating more than 800 patients annually. In addition to its bird care programs, the Center teaches thousands of children and families through education programs to connect with nature and become inspired to conserve wildlife. The Center strives to teach guests the importance of caring for wild birds and the habitats they live in. Tour participants will see the Center's non-releasable resident raptors and enjoy stories about the birds while learning about Florida's natural history and Audubon's conservation efforts.
